2017 Vermont Outstanding Tree Farm Tour

David and Jenny Stoner - Greensboro, Vermont

Saturday, August 12, 2017; 8:30AM-2:30PM

Join us for a tour of Tree Farm #1591, the Stoner Family Tree Farm. David and Jenny Stoner purchased their land in beautiful Greensboro in 1983 after searching for just the right property to manage, steward, and make a difference by owning. The Stoners 361 acres are a Certified Tree Farm that they have worked over the last 30 years to keep their land important to three generations of their family.

There will be three different morning tours of the property (see reverse for agenda):

- Wildlife Habitat Management and Land Use History: explore over two decades of work done to improve habitat; release and pruning of more than 300 wild apples, planting berries and fruits, mowing fields and maintaining edges, 2 acre clear-cuts to regenerate early successional species, beech tree release in a sugar bush. Visit to the Babcock farm site & replacing a culvert to meet the AMP standards. Easy to moderate terrain, mostly trails.
- Silviculture and Natural Communities: Hike up to the top of the hill through one of Vermont's more interesting natural communities, enriched northern hardwoods. The walk goes through two thinnings, and on the upper ridge, five two-acre patch cuts laid out to regenerate hardwoods in insect damaged areas; these cuts were laid out to the standards of NRCS programs to improve habitat. Water bottles can be recharged at Gideon's spring, named for a grandson. Moderate to difficult uphill climb with few trails
- Multiple Use Tree Farm Management: See how this Tree Farm One of the tenants of the American Tree Farm Programs has been to encourage multiple uses of the forest. In this tour, we will see where the management has produced wood, provided recreational opportunities, preserved water quality, and improved wildlife habitat. Also, there will be a stop to look at the Babcock Farm foundation. Easy to moderate terrain mostly along ski trails maintained by the Craftsbury Outdoor Center.
